"The Open 2011: Tom Lewis must guard against silver medal hijack", Ewan Murray, Saturday 16 July 2011.

It would seem almost unedifying if Tom Lewis, whose first 18 holes of the Open Championship offered fairytale material, spends Sunday scrapping for a less salubrious prize than the Claret Jug.

Peter Uihlein's 75 on Saturday – an admirable score, given he played in easily the most severe of the day's conditions – left him seven over for the tournament. That was eight shots worse off than Lewis before the Englishman strode on to the tee for his latest round in the company of a luminary, this time Phil Mickelson.

Lewis's main task from the moment he dropped four shots in his opening eight third-round holes was straightforward. Rather than reignite a challenge for the championship, the 20-year-old has to ensure he does not concede the silver medal awarded for the best amateur performance at the season's third major to Uihlein. A seemingly straightforward task for Lewis now requires a bit of Sunday work.
